When everyone else is freaking out, you’re settling in. You’ll outlast most anything man or mother nature throws at you, allowing you the time and resources needed to get back on your feet.

You are ready for those events you see on the evening news: hurricanes and tornadoes, quakes and tsunamis, recessions, big winter storms, hot lava... the usual life-disrupting regional disasters.

When the going gets tough, you’re ready to get going and outrun the ice storm, the rising water, the wildfire or the social uprising. Whatever might interrupt life for a while.

As long as you can get to the store for milk, bread and necessities, you’re fine... for a week or so. Otherwise, expect inconvenience, hunger, and difficulties with even the slightest shift in the community routine.

All is well, for today. When a long power outage, an emergency evacuation, or a bad storm hits, though, you’re as vulnerable as a newborn baby.
